Mokena's Once Popular Dance Pavilion Torn Down

The old Mokena Men's Club dance pavilion which has been located and operated in the Cappel Grove on Wolf road south of Mokena for over 27 years, is now a thing of the past. The pavilion was torn down the past week by a Mr. Walsh of Joliet who purchased the lumber in this building recently.

With the passing of the dance pavilion, there is no amusement place of any kind in Mokena.

The old Mokena Pleasure Club at one time held open air dances in a tract of woods southeast of Mokena. About 1909 the Mokena Men's Club was organized and incorporated and the Cappel Grove was leased for a term of years and the pavilion was built in its day it was one of the finest dance pavilions in the country. In the beginning dances were held every two weeks and were known as "Moonlight Picnics". Later dances were held every Saturday night.

Too many road house dancing places and other keen competition made the pavilion dances unprofitable, so the Men's Club decided to quit.

The pavilion was operated for the last time last year. Some of the best orchestras in the country have been seen and heard at this pavilion.

The passing of this old landmark will be noticed for some time.

The Men's Club and its dance pavilion was the only Mokena organization to live more than a few years as has been the case with most of the Mokena organizations.

Louis Virgilio, forty years old, Aurora, was found shot to death in Aurora. Apparently he had been tossed from an automobile after being shot twice in the head.

The body of Lee Briggs, forty-six years old, was found in the ruins of the Briggs home in Montgomery, an Aurora suburb, after the structure had been destroyed by fire. He also asked the report of thefts of red lanterns and torches from locations where highways are undergoing repairs.

A delegation of 50 residents of Alexander, Union and Jackson counties, met with Governor Horner and presented the chief executive with a petition for construction of a 50-mile highway from Murphysboro south to Cass, near Cairo. The highway, the governor was told, would pass through the heart of the southern Illinois fruit belt, and would relieve traffic congestion in that part of the state.

Federal Judge Charles E. Woodward dismissed the voluntary bankruptcy petition filed in behalf of the village of Lemont, 25 miles southwest of Chicago. The judge held that the petition did not fulfill the provisions of Section 80 of the amended bankruptcy law which was passed in March, 1934, and which allows municipalities to seek a readjustment of their indebtedness. The court ruled that the village officials had failed to gain the consent of 51 per cent of the holders of about $300,000 in special assessment bonds involved in the litigation.

Heavily armed state policemen held control of the situation at the Apollo Metal works in La Salle after it had been besieged most of the night by a mob of about 500 strikers and sympathizers. The rioters repeatedly stormed the plant in efforts to get at 40 men employed by the company to dismantle the plant for removal to another city. The crowd insisted the men were strike breakers hired to operate the factory.

Jubilee, which can hardly claim the distinction of being a country crossroads at the present time, came back into something of its old glory when pilgrims from all parts of the state assembled there to pay tribute to a historic past. The occasion was the statewide celebration of the centennial of the Episcopal church in Illinois. With church dignitaries from Chicago and other church centers in the Middle West participating, old Jubilee college, once the pride of Episcopalianism, became the focal point of interest.

AN ENEMY PROVES TO BE A FRIEND

The things we do and things we say, (Tis true though hard to believe it so)
Affect the lives of other folk
More often than we ever know.

SO it is that friends often hurt each other and in the same way enemies help each other without the least idea of so doing. It is a funny world. It certainly is a funny world. You think only of yourself and straightway do the greatest possible kindness or an equally great harm to some one of whom you are not thinking at all, and never know anything about it.

Danny Overheard Mrs. Hooty Tell Hooty That She Had Seen and Heard Some One Moving Down Below.

Just take the case of Mrs. Hooty and Danny Meadow Mouse. Danny always thought of Mrs. Hooty, just as he did of Hooty, as one of the enemies he must always be on the watch for after dark, and Mrs. Hooty always thought of Danny Meadow Mouse simply as a good dinner if only she could catch him. The idea of doing Danny a good turn never in all her life had entered her head. Nor had the idea that she could do such a thing ever entered Danny's funny little head. Yet Mrs. Hooty did do Danny a good turn. In fact, all unknowingly she proved to be a friend.

You remember that Billy Mink had trapped Danny in a hollow log in the Green Forest. Billy couldn't get into that hollow log because the doorway was too small. So he promptly told Danny that he would keep watch until Danny starved to death inside or came out to be caught. Then Hooty the Owl and Mrs. Hooty arrived in a tree close by and Danny overheard Mrs. Hooty tell Hooty that she had seen and heard some one moving down below and that she intended to stay right there until she found out who it was.

Danny at once thought that she was watching for him. But when he had had time to think a little he remembered that he hadn't so much as poked his nose outside that hollow log since the coming of Mrs. Hooty, so of course she couldn't have seen him. Could it have been Billy Mink she had seen? Danny at once became very much interested and crept a little nearer the doorway. He wanted very much to see what was going on outside.

For some time nothing happened. Then he heard Hooty's voice way off in the distance. He crept just a wee bit closer to the doorway and peeped up in the top of the tree where he had heard Mr. and Mrs. Hooty talking. He was just in time to see a great dark shadow sweep silently down. He heard a spiteful snarl and knew then that Mrs. Hooty had tried to catch Billy Mink and had missed him. And he knew, too, that, having escaped, Billy would waste no time hanging about there, but would seek a safer place.

Danny let a little sigh of relief escape. Mrs. Hooty had frightened Billy Mink away and did not herself know that Danny was there. He was no longer trapped. She who would gladly have eaten him had proved a friend by setting him free. Didn't I say that this is a funny world?

THE UNKNOWN

By ANNE CAMPBELL

I DO not know which way the road may lead
Tomorrow.
My soul may tremble like a broken reed
To sorrow;
But though unknown the dark untraveled way,
I have Today!

This day is steeped in joy! Each shining minute
Has gladness in it.
No black forebodings steal the skies' clear blue;
The sun shines through,
And golden lies the path that winds this hour
To love in flower.

I have Today! I face it gratefully,
Intending,
No matter where the road that's meant for me
Is wending
To walk it as the saints their hard way trod,
With faith in God!

When company drops in and needs quick refreshment on a hot day, try an orange ginger ale. For each person combine two-thirds of a cup of orange juice, one-third of a cup of ginger ale, pour over a glass of cracked ice and serve at once. For a delightful ice cream soda serve a glass two-thirds full of orange juice and add a ball of vanilla ice cream. Stir rapidly and serve. Orange juice with lemon juice is liked by many as a combination drink. Iced coffee served as an ice cream soda drink is most delicious. Drop in the ball of ice cream and serve at once. One should remember when serving these refreshing drinks that they are not only cooling to the body, delightful to the palate, but are supplying the body with needed minerals and vitamins for health.

Wild Geese Can Be Confused

The directional sense of the wild goose, while incredibly accurate most of the time, is by no means infallible. Thick weather, wind storms and other natural hazards sometimes confuse whole flocks and lead them to destruction.

Fighting Fire With "Airfoam"

THIS is a scene at Feltham, England, during a demonstration of the "airfoam" apparatus which extinguishes fires in quick time with a smothering action. A mixture of 90 per cent air, 9.8 per cent water and 0.2 per cent soap produces a foam seven times lighter than water, which excludes air from the seat of combustion and can be pumped to great heights.

Lesson for June 9

THE HOLY SPIRIT
(Pentecost Lesson)

LESSON TEXT—John 16:7-11; Romans 8:10-17, 26, 27.
GOLDEN TEXT—For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.—Romans 8:14.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Keeps His Promise.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Coming of the Holy Spirit.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How the Holy Spirit Helps Us.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Work of the Holy Spirit.

1. The Holy Spirit Promised (Joel 2:28, 29).

The prophet foretold that in messianic times there would be a mighty effusion of the Holy Spirit.

1. He was to be poured out.
2. He was to be bestowed upon all flesh, irrespective of age, sex, or class.

3. This out-pouring was to issue in extraordinary activity and service.

4. This activity was to be accompanied by marvelous signs.

II. This Prophetic Promise Was Partially Fulfilled at Pentecost (Acts 2:1-21, 32, 33).

The unusual behavior of the disciples at Pentecost, with Peter's preaching which resulted in the conversion of thousands, evidenced the supernatural, but the cosmic signs which the prophet predicted to take place in heaven and earth were not in evidence. The real fulfillment of the prophet's prediction is in the future and will find fulfillment in connection with the regathering of Israel and the establishment of the Messianic Kingdom.

III. Some Names of the Holy Spirit.

1. Comforter (John 14:16, 17). "Comforter" means literally "one called to one's side as a part taker, an advocate, a helper and defender." He is called "another Comforter" as he was to take the place of Jesus.

2. The Witness (John 15:26). The Spirit peculiarly witnesses of Christ. He does not speak of himself, but takes the things of Christ and shows them unto us (John 16:13).

3. The Spirit of Truth (John 16:13). The Holy Spirit guides into all truth. Those who are taught by him know the truth.

IV. Some Works of the Spirit.

1. He regenerates (John 3:3-8). The new birth is peculiarly the Spirit's work.

2. He teaches (John 14:26). The Holy Spirit was to take up the work of teaching the disciples.

3. Convicts the world of sin (John 16:8, 9). The Holy Spirit alone can show men the demerit of their lives and their shortcomings before God.

4. Convicts the world of righteousness (John 16:10). The resurrection and ascension of Christ prove that he is the Righteous One and that righteousness is only possible as he is accepted as Savior.

5. Convicts the world of judgment (John 16:11). Sin unatoned for shall be punished. The sinner who refuses the righteousness which God provided in Jesus Christ shall be judged.

6. Gives victory over the flesh (Rom. 8:2, 12, 13). By the energy of the Holy Spirit the carnal nature can be kept in subjection.

7. He leads the believer (Rom. 8:14). The Spirit-filled believer lives the life of the Son of God.

8. He gives assurance to the believer (Rom. 8:15-17). The Holy Spirit witnesses together with the human spirit to the reality of the new birth.

9. Enables the believer to pray according to the will of God (Rom. 8:26, 27). The Holy Spirit helps the believer's infirmities in prayer.

V. The Diversity of the Gifts of the Spirit (1 Cor. 12:4-11).

In the Church there are to be found those possessing the gifts of wisdom, faith, healing, miracles, prophecy, discernment of spirits, divers kinds of tongues and their interpretation.

VI. The Sealing of the Spirit (Eph. 1:13, 14).

Into the regenerated life comes the Holy Spirit at once. The indwelling of the Divine Spirit is God's seal of ownership. It is not only a seal of ownership, but of security. It is also the guarantee of the completion of the work of redemption.

VII. The Unity of the Spirit (Eph. 4:1-6).

Christian unity is only possible when effected by the one Holy Spirit.

VIII. The Sin of Grieving the Spirit (Eph. 4:30).

The Spirit may be grieved by failure to respond to his initiative, by yielding to the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye and the vainglory of life, by failure to render full and free obedience, as well as failure to surrender every faculty of the being to his control and direction.

Joy

Joy is the mainspring in the whole round of everlasting nature; joy moves the wheels of the great timepiece of the world; she it is that loosens flowers from their buds, suns from their firmaments, rolling spheres in distant space seen not by the glass of the astronomer.—Schiller.

Nobleness

Be noble, and the nobleness that lies in other men, sleeping but never dead, will rise in majesty to meet thine own.—James Russell Lowell.

Modern Mother

JEANNETTE was washing the kitchen window when she saw the roadster turn into the drive next door. Jimsy's tricycle was on the driveway. She ran out quickly and grabbed it up.

The roadster had stopped. A young man was alighting. He grinned and called out, "Thanks, but you needn't have bothered."

Jeannette gave an answering smile as she pushed her tumbled hair back from her face.

She was wishing she had powdered her nose.

"This moving business and trying to keep up with a boy of three—" she began.

"Is something else I can well imagine," he interrupted.

The tanned face that was undeniably handsome broke up into patchy twinklings. Brown eyes assured understanding.

"Are you settled?"

"N-no, not all, of course—"

A scream rent the air.

Jeannette cried, "It's Jimsy!" and ran toward the garage whence the sound seemed to emanate.

The young man followed.

Halfway up the inside of the garage hanging perilously to a wobbly board that had pulled loose at one end, was Jimsy.

"Auntie Nette, I've falling!"

"Hold tight. I'll get you, darling."

But big masculine arms helped Jimsy down.

"Thank you, so much, Mr.—" Jeannette hesitated.

"Cameron, George Cameron. Your next door neighbor."

"And I'm—"

But Jeannette had no time for more. "Jimsy!"

The youngster had tripped on a can of paint and was sprawled in a pool of vermilion lacquer. His eyes were enormous.

"Tse bleeding, Auntie Nette!"

"No Jimsy, it's paint. And gracious! What a mess!"

George whistled. He picked Jimsy up gingerly and stood him away from the pool of paint. His eyes were turning somersaults of merriment as they met Jeannette's.

"Looks as if you had a job on your hands."

"Rather!"

Jeannette's eyes danced as they watched the young man's mouth curl with laughter.

"Say, your crinkles when you laugh," he announced approvingly.

They laughed together then forgetful of Jimsy.

George walked into the house the back way.

He was thinking.

"Antoinette, eh? One of these modern mothers. Lets her son call her by her first name. Well, a darned cute one."

His eyes sobered.

He thought of her all through the day.

Jeannette was undressing Jimsy that evening when the telephone rang. "It's a girl," said Bob's tired husky voice.

"Oh Bob, that's great. How's Marie?"

"All right, they say. Anyway I'm staying awhile. I'll be home later."

Jeannette swallowed a lump in her throat.

"Jimsy," she said, "you've a new baby sister. Your daddy just called."

She smiled and hugged him, but tears came to her eyes.

She suddenly remembered the young man next door. George.

The next afternoon Jeannette and Jimsy were in the back yard when George drove up again.

Jimsy went tearing across to the car on his tricycle. He hit a bump and fell in a heap and began to cry lustily.

George retrieved the tricycle and Jimsy handed the latter over to Jeannette.

"He seems to have a flair for it," he told her, grinning.

Jeannette dried the little fellow's tears and told him to play with his wheelbarrow while but Jimsy wanted only his tricycle. He got on it and soon had tumbled again.

"Bull-headed, eh?" George teased her.

"No, plucky," Jeannette said mischievously.

"Just like his daddy."

"Oh-I see," George said but he was thinking, "The lucky bum!"

Jimsy came up and pulled George toward the car.

"Take me a ride," he begged.

"O. K., little man. I'm just going up to the next town. Five miles. I'll be glad to take you if—"

His eyes met Jeannette's.

"Say, why couldn't you go, too? We'd be back by five."

"I'd love it. Just so I'm back in time to fix Bob's supper."

George thought as he opened the door for them to get in:

"If Thalia had been like this—caring about a home, a baby, supper—"

The ride was stimulating. Jimsy pointed and chattered. Jeannette and George talked, laughed, fell silent. But the silences were pleasant, too.

"I'm taking you to see my new house. It's just finished. They're putting on the last lock today."

"A new house? How lovely! And it's really yours?"

"Yes, Mine."

"You—you must be going to get married," Jeannette said finding a little catch in her throat, as she said it.

"I thought I was but it seems that I'm not."

George spoke without hesitation. "Oh, I'm sorry," Jeannette said in a tiny voice feeling her heart leap with joy.

They explored the house to its last lovely detail. As they stood in front of the fireplace Jeannette said slowly, softly, "I'd love a little home like this." A crash came from the kitchen.

"Jimsy!"

They ran out together to find him all mixed up with a stepladder on the kitchen floor. There was a big knot on his forehead.

"I want my mamma," he yelled.

"Aunt Nette's got you, darling."

"No, no. I want my mamma!" he insisted.

George's mouth snapped open.

"You aren't his mother?" he shouted.

His intense brown eyes were demanding an answer as if it were very important.

Jeannette was mystified.

"Why, no! You didn't think—?"

"Of course I did. I've a notion to spank you."

George took her arm; pulled her toward him.

"I supposed of course you knew. His mother's in the hospital with a new baby. I'm her sister."

The rest was smothered against a tweed shoulder.

"I won't ask for more than a hug—yet—"

George said close to her ear.

But he helped himself to more than one.

Peruvian Mummies Are Shown at Field Museum

An exhibit of so-called "mummies" and reproductions of two opened graves of ancient Peru are shown in the hall of Central and South American archeology at Field Museum of Natural History.

The mummies, which differ greatly from those of Egypt, are more exactly described as desiccated bodies. These were packed in bundles, which were found buried at a depth of several feet in the famous necropolis, or burying ground, of Ancon, Peru.

Two of the mummy packs have been opened, revealing the bodies inside. They are in a good state of preservation, due, according to J. Eric Thompson, assistant curator of Central and South American archeology, to the extreme aridity of the coastal plains of Peru.

The majority of Peruvian mummies were not artificially preserved, but in some cases the bodies were eviscerated, while in others resin was applied as a preservative.

The graves which have been reproduced date to the period about A. D. 1250. One contains three mummy bundles, apparently two women and a small child. The sex of the two adults is indicated by women's work habits which were buried with them and which appear among the contents of the grave as now exhibited. Bags of cocoa leaves, which the ancient Peruvians chewed as a stimulant; silver ornaments, spindles and other objects are also included in the grave.

The second grave was covered by a roof two feet below the surface of the ground. This was elaborately constructed and is among the best preserved found at Ancon. This roof, shown in the exhibit, consisted of three inches of hard white clay, beneath which were a layer of plant leaves, two mats of reeds and rafters of algarroba wood.

Wall Paper

In the olden days of the feudal lords, the walls of their castles were hung with rich embroideries and handsomely woven tapestries. These served a double purpose, to decorate the walls and to make the huge, drafty rooms less cold and bleak. For many centuries walls were decorated only with hangings, until finally some clever person thought of imitating these hangings in heavy paper and of using this paper for wall decorations. This was a very successful idea, and in 1790 a wall paper factory was established in the United States. The first wall papers were quite expensive, but they were also very durable. After a great deal of experimenting there were developed cheaper types of wall paper, and since the beginning of the Nineteenth century paper has been in general use for decoration of walls in many countries of the civilized world.

Digging Through the World

A widely accepted theory regarding the earth's make-up is that a solid crust, corresponding to the rind of an orange, encloses a molten interior corresponding to the pulp, says Tit-Bits Magazine. This theory is supported by mining and boring experience which shows the average rise of temperature downwards to be one degree Fahrenheit for every 50 or 60 feet. Thus at 50 miles the temperature must be 4,600 degrees, or far higher than the fusing point of platinum, which melts at 3,980 degrees. The late Lord Kelvin declared that this planet could not maintain its shape unless the supposed crust were 2,500 miles thick, and concluded that the mass of the earth "is on the whole more rigid than a continuous solid globe of glass of the same dimensions."

National Topics Interpreted

by William Bruckart

National Press Building

Washington, D. C.

Washington.—President Roosevelt announced a year ago that the Tennessee Valley authority and the experiment of government production of electric power on a huge scale was to serve as a yardstick on electric rates charged by private power companies.

Lately, J. R. McCarl, comptroller general of the United States, has had his bookkeeping sleuths at work on the records of the Tennessee Valley authority, it being a government corporation. Mr. McCarl was not concerned about the yardstick for power rates nor was he interested in experiments designed to prove the value of government ownership in the power field. His job was to determine what had happened to all of the money that had been taken from the treasury and spent in the effort to transform the Tennessee valley into a modern Garden of Eden.

It happened that Mr. McCarl's report on the audit of TVA affairs was made public coincidentally with a movement by the TVA directors for new legislation—amendments to their basic law which would give them additional authority. This circumstance resulted in the TVA and its yardstick being examined by a congressional committee under the strong lens of a magnifying glass. I believe it is generally agreed that TVA suffered in prestige, and government ownership advocates came off second best because disclosures before the committee were of such a nature as to convince most sound thinking observers that there is a colored gentleman in the TVA woodpile.

For instance, Mr. McCarl showed in his report that the federal government had expended a total of $132,702,000 in development of the power facilities, equipment and necessary appurtenances. This property was transferred by the federal government to the Tennessee Valley authority, a corporation, and is carried on the corporation books at $51,000,000. This is 38 per cent of the actual cost to the taxpayers of the property transferred.

Disclosures of this fact brought many charges in the course of the committee hearing and led to the conclusion by several house members that no electric rate based upon 38 per cent of the cost of the production facilities could be considered honest. In other words, the thought was that a yardstick based on such a method of calculating investment necessarily would have to be made of rubber.

Mr. McCarl told the committee also that he had found various haphazard and "trick" methods of bookkeeping and that he had found it necessary to disallow expenditures of something over two million dollars which he said were illegal. The comptroller general did not refer to these expenditures as having been fraudulently made but he told the committee it was his opinion that the law had to be stretched rather far by any spending agency to construe the payments as justifiable.

The comptroller general took sharp exception to the bookkeeping methods used by the TVA. It is upon these records that the electric rate is based. Likewise it is upon the basis of these records that the TVA must show whether it has earned a profit.

"Despite the apparently excessive depreciation value at which the Muscle Shoals property was taken up on the books, the authority is not using the valuation basis for depreciation but instead is basing depreciation on the earnings from the sale of power by charging 10 per cent of the gross revenue to operations as depreciation and accumulating the amount of such charges as a reserve for depreciation."

"Assuming a very conservative rate of valuation consumption for example, 2 per cent, the amount of depreciation, based upon the value at which the properties in question were capitalized by the authority, would be approximately $1,000,000 per annum."

"A larger revenue will proportionately increase the reserve for depreciation at the present 10 per cent method of amortization, but to accumulate a reserve on the 10 per cent plan equivalent to the amount that would be charged to depreciation on a valuation basis at 2 per cent, the gross revenues would have to be more than ten times the present amount or about $10,000,000 per annum."

"There is very little basis for assuming that revenues will ever reach such a figure."

The comptroller's report touched on many other phases of TVA affairs which he found subject to criticism and it made mention of a factor that, it seems to me, ought to be of vital importance to communities throughout the country. That factor is taxation. It is to be remembered that government agencies, federal, national, state or local, pay no taxes into the treasury of its jurisdiction. Consequently, the government which fosters a municipally owned power plant simply must forget, for taxation purposes, that such property exists within its domain. Likewise, such a plant is not required to consider interests on the investment in the shape of dividends to the stockholders who, in turn, pay taxes on their income.

Doctor Morgan and other directors of the TVA were subjected to questioning of a type about as severe as any witnesses before a house committee in recent months. They had friends on the committee who attempted continuously to shield them from the fire of TVA opponents, but apparently Chairman McSwain was unable to choke off the attack by such men as Representative McLean of New Jersey and others who doubt the advisability of the federal government engaging in power production.

There appeared just no way at all in which friendly members of the house committee could justify the action of the TVA board in its attempts to block private power development. It was shown in the course of the hearing that the TVA had gone far away from its base of operations to buy two small parcels of land—one not much larger than a city block and the other only a few acres in extent. Under questioning, TVA directors admitted this land lay in the middle of a proposed reservoir planned by a private power corporation. In acquiring the parcels of land the TVA made it impossible for the private interests to proceed with their power development because the land in question would have been in the middle of the reservoir 300 feet under water. The private interests could not force the TVA to sell and without that land the whole reservoir program was destroyed.

The TVA probably will win and obtain the amendments its board of directors desire. There are public ownership advocates in sufficient strength to carry out the President's idea in going ahead with the TVA development. It is made to appear, nevertheless, that as a result of the disclosures before the house committee, TVA may not henceforth proceed in a manner quite so arrogant.

Politics is politics and apparently politicians will play the game always. If better proof be needed, it seems to me the demonstration over immediate payment of the cash bonus to war veterans will suffice. The bonus has been kicked for this session of congress but all indications point to a belief that the country may not be so lucky in the next session of congress which is not far ahead of the 1936 elections.

An organized minority—the World War veterans—were very close to success in forcing congress to appropriate $2,600,000,000 and pay it over to them. They failed because President Roosevelt—like three Presidents before him—had to view the problem from the standpoint of the country's welfare and not the welfare of this minority. Credit is due the President for the stand he took just as credit was due Presidents Hoover, Coolidge and Harding. He will be criticized and attacked by this local minority just as the others were criticized and attacked. While a veto message is regarded by many as not being as strong as it might have been, nevertheless Mr. Roosevelt was firm and his firmness gave courage to enough senators to avoid the debacle of additional waste.

I am informed that the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars and various and sundry other organizations of former soldiers, sailors and marines are prepared for a bitter fight next year against those representatives and senators who dared to oppose cash payment of the bonus now when it is not due until 1945. The soldiers' lobby is the greatest and most expensive lobby in Washington now. It knows its power and it does not hesitate to characterize opponents of the cash bonus as traitors. The lobbyists are certain to go into every state and congressional district next summer and seek to defeat those who dared to follow their own conscience and vote against this raid on the treasury.

As a result of the vote on the bonus, and the subsequent Presidential veto some keen political observers have begun to calculate in their own minds what the view of the country is. It was pointed out, for example, that a maximum of four million would be entitled to a bonus. At the same time attention was called to the fact that new voters are arriving at the age of franchise at the rate of approximately two million a year or almost thirty-six million since the end of the World war. These observers contend that the new voters and those who are not entitled to the bonus constitute a majority. Thus, they seek to show that there is a great majority of the voters of the country unwilling to see such a sum of money voted to a minority, especially at a time when the government is taxing its citizens and borrowing in billions to give relief to all whether they fought for their country or not. The question is then whether the politicians will wake up in time to represent the majority or be fooled by the power of a highly organized minority.

Dental Hygiene

The Road to Health

By DR. R. ALLEN GRIFFITH

DISCOLORED TEETH

TEETH are never pure white. A negro's teeth look white because of the contrast with his dark skin. Most teeth are a blending of yellow and blue. The enamel and dentine are both semi-transparent, the dentine carrying the underlying color, which is more or less yellow.

Discoloration of the teeth is usually due to deposits on the outer surface, to fillings or to drugs to treat teeth. Deposits that form on the outer surfaces of teeth are due to the formation of mucin plaques which become stained by food, tobacco, etc. This class of stains is due entirely to failure to keep the tooth surfaces clean.

In certain parts of the country, many of the children have badly spotted teeth and discolored enamel. This is due to the mineral content of the water.

Where the enamel is broken or worn away so the dentine is exposed it is very easily discolored. When the front teeth erupt their cutting edges have three serrations which wear away as the teeth are used. This wear increases with age and finally, in many instances, the enamel is worn through. Discoloration then is easy. Many tobacco users' teeth finally become very dark as the stain penetrates through the tiny canals which radiate all through the dentine. Women who smoke will find their front teeth growing disgustingly unsightly as they grow older.

Pitted teeth are also a source of discoloration. Pits in teeth are usually due to childhood diseases, such as measles, scarlet fever, etc. Any illness that interferes with the nutrition for a short period of time may cause pits in the teeth. Yet the teeth are not directly attacked by these diseases, as many people suppose. Dentists are frequently asked if the pits are not produced on the teeth in the same manner as they are produced on the face in chickenpox. This is not true. The pits are a secondary result, due to the fact that all the powers of the system are concentrated on combating the disease and its effects, during the period when the teeth are forming.

Pitted teeth decay rapidly because they afford a lodging place for the fermentation of food. They are usually treated by filling which is necessary after decay starts. Many of these cases can be treated by polishing. The enamel can be polished down until the surface is smooth, which prevents decay, and removes and prevents a return of the discoloration.

CITY VS. COUNTRY TEETH

IT IS a commonly accepted theory that the country boy is healthier than the city boy. With his advantages of outdoor life and exercise, he should be, but many statistics show that he is not. The physical examination of the school children of the United States shows that the country child is from 5 to 20 per cent more defective than the city child.

Take the tuberculosis statistics as a test.

We have been taught that fresh air and outdoor life are the panacea for tuberculosis. We read advertisements everywhere declaring that, this, that or the other sanitarium, located in some distant part of the country, offers a sure cure for tuberculosis, largely on account of climatic conditions.

Statistics show that only a fraction of 1 per cent of city children have tuberculosis, in spite of the smoky atmosphere of the city, while 3.7 per cent of country children have an affection of the lungs. The proportion runs just about four to one against the rural youngsters.

This list could be carried on indefinitely.

To what is this condition due?

It can only be due to one thing. The city child gets better medical and dental attention than the country child. No one can go through our country districts without noticing the dirty, unkempt mouths of most people.

They seldom visit a dentist except to have a tooth extracted.

Bad teeth are acknowledged to have a direct bearing on the health, and teeth without doubt play an important part in the poor showing of the country child.

The army draft in the late war disclosed the fact that the city boy has far better teeth and is more perfect physically than the boy from the rural districts. The city boy has a far better opportunity to come in contact with the dentist and learns to take care of his teeth and keep them in a high state of efficiency. In most of our city schools there is some sort of dental examinations of the children, while only a few states make any attempt to care for the teeth of the children in country schools.

The draft in the late war also showed that a large per cent of the physical defects of our boys are remediable, and they were remedied wherever possible. Is this not the best possible argument for military training? Would it not be far better to draft our young men who are out of work now and put them in the army where they would receive proper medical and dental care than to keep them in idleness on a dole?

Watch Your Eye-Lens
Frightened to Death
All Possess Language
Eating Bark and Earth

Important news for life insurance companies. A tendency to old age or early death is inherited, according to Dr. Felix Bernstein of Columbia university, who talked to the National Academy of Science in Chicago. A scientist can tell how old you are, physically, by examining the lens of your eye. It always shows signs of hardening before fifty; the extent of the hardening decides how old you really are.

Arthur Brisbane

The rest of your body—brain, heart and all the rest—grows old about as rapidly as the eye-lens does.

Leaving out accidents and attacks by disease germs, there is a sort of "pre-destination" in the length of life.

Two brothers, fifteen and ten years of age, with a young friend, were going to an entertainment last Christmas night. George Bond and Carl McMurty of Poplar Bluff, Mo., thought it would be amusing to frighten the children by running after them, telling them, "You will never live to get there."

The two older boys "got there." The little ten-year-old boy, James Ainley, dropped dead of fright as the men pursued him. A sensible jury decides that the two men shall spend six months in jail and pay $100 fine for their "joke." The jury might well have made it ten years, for it was stupid manslaughter. There is nothing more brutal, cruel or more completely worthy of a genuine "yahoo" than frightening children.

Secretary of Interior Ickes, who also possesses the gift of forcible speech, calls Senator Long "a ranting demagogue," describes, more gently, one other well known broadcaster, and rebukes, without mentioning his name, Doctor Townsend, whom he accuses of arousing false hopes in the "underprivileged."

Senator Huey Long, his language never failing him, able to speak his mind freely in the senate, addressing that august body, describes the secretary of interior as "Lord High Chamberlain Ickes, the chinch-bug of Chicago."

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace he called the "Lord Destroyer, the ignoramus of Iowa."

We complain of our depression with good cause. We might find queer consolation in reading about miserable inhabitants of Formosa, property of Japan, inhabited chiefly by Chinese, who made up 80 per cent of the sufferers and victims in the recent earthquake.

In Formosa, men, women and children have been stripping the bark from elm trees and eating it and they may be seen on barren fields, pulling up wild grass by the roots, washing and eating the roots, as well as the grass itself. Many have died from eating bark mixed with earth and water, the earth causing death by intestinal stoppage.

Those poor creatures have a real depression, with no rich government to pour out billions for jobs, relief, dole, etc.

The American Philosophical society, gathered in Philadelphia, learns from Doctor Slipper, director of the Lowell observatory at Flagstaff, Ariz., that to people on the planet Mars, if any are there, our earth is a blue planet.

If those Martians will continue watching us, until some European or Asiatic country sends a few thousand planes in our direction, they will see this corner of the earth a deeper and darker blue than ever. What a lesson we shall learn some day if we continue with our eyes shut!

Newspaper editors, that ought to know something about prosperity, gathered in New York from all over the country, tell you they see a "business pickup," better times are coming. That is a cheerful prediction.

Some boys in high schools, and bigger boys in colleges, recently organized a "strike" to express their horror of war.

War is horrible; it should be, and eventually will be, unnecessary. But there is some good in all evil, and young students and others should reflect on past wars and what modern civilization owes to them.

Germany wants colonies, and is embarrassed by the fact that this would mean taking in a great many black ladies and gentlemen that by no stretch of the imagination could be called "Aryans." The German government announces that, while it could not admit negroes to German citizenship, as Britain does in her colonies, black colonial negroes would be "Schutzbefohlene," with every right except the right to adopt Aryan strut.

Big Doings by Every "Iron Horse" June 10

A whirlwind of enthusiastic approval and pledges of cooperation throughout twenty-four states of the Union have been the immediate results of an announcement that Railroad Week would be celebrated here June 10 to 15, it was announced here today.

Chairman Harry G. Taylor of the Western Association of Railroad Executives pointed to his desk, heaped with telegrams and letter from business men, heads of trade organization and other leaders in scores of cities and towns. Each of these, he explained, breathed a spirit of co-operation to make Railroad Week the most spectacular celebration in America's transportation history.

The iron horse will not only be "at home" in spick-and-span round houses to the public during that week, but will lift its voice in the most tremendous salvo of whistles heard since the first Armistice Day. The locomotive "chorus" will be heard from the Great Lakes to the Pacific Ocean and from Alaska to the Rio Grande river on the opening day of Railroad Week at an hour later to be set. Amid the dauntless tooting of steam whistles will be heard the voice of a newcomer in the progressive march of the Western railroads toward higher speeds with maximum safety. It will be the piercing siren of the Diesel-driven stream line train, of which several are now in daily, successful service on western lines.

The whistling chorus over, the events of Railroad Week will proceed in hundreds of cities and towns throughout 12 states, communities to which these railroads are the life blood of commercial existence, all of them owing most of their growth and many their birth to the steel threads of transportation.

There will be public meetings, dinners and parades; there will be decorated railroad stations and terminals, some containing historical exhibits of western railroading. Merchants will cooperate with "railroadin'" window decorations. Reunions of old time railroad men will bring pioneers of rails together who have not met in comradeship for years. Veteran telegraphers will "speak" to each other over the wires at widely separated distances. Youngsters will enjoy railroaders' picnics along with the grownups. And the public will see railroading "behind the scenes" as invited guests at railroad shops and round-houses at division points where such hospitality is practicable.

Even dining car stewards and chefs are preparing to make Railroad Week memorable for travelers, for then they will offer special dishes based on their own favorite recipes. Dining car patrons need not be surprised to see ice cream in the form of locomotives with pink headlights.

Behind the festivities Railroad Week has a serious significance, it was pointed out by Mr. Taylor. The week commemorates a titan period in American railroad building, which was synonymous with the winning of the west. Seventy years ago westward progress was begun on the construction of the first transcontinental railroad. Only the year before eastward construction had been begun from the Pacific coast. The 1860's were punctuated with great strides in railroad building which signaled the entrance of the western part of the United States into equality with other sections in all aspects of modern civilization.

But Railroad Week is not essentially a historical event. It will lay emphasis, rather, on the public's renewed recognition that the railroads of the United States, the western lines in particular, form one of the most progressive of its industries, quick to develop and to adopt mechanical improvements aiming at greater speed with safety, greater comfort and wherever possible cheaper fares.

Air-conditioning, a success achieved and no longer an experiment, has been introduced into all the principal trains of the western railroads for the summer of 1935. Speeded-up train schedules are being inaugurated not only with the new streamlined trains but with regular steam-operated passenger units.

Basic fares have been reduced and sleeping car super-fares have been eliminated. Beginning May 15 a series of all-expense circle tours over the combination scenic routes of western railroads offer to summer tourists more comprehensive "bargain" tours than any ever before arranged by American carriers. "Railroad progress involving a notable contribution to this nation's economic recovery, will be recognized by millions of Americans during Railroad Week", predicted Chairman Taylor.

News From Springfield

By Bernice T. Van der Vries
Representative Seventh District

Last week in the Assembly was peaceful compared with the tumult and strife of the preceding weeks—with the 3% sales tax bill disposed of the major portion of the time was taken up in passing the administration appropriation bills. The Republican side attempted to have many of the bills itemized but without success.

It was rumored that the utilities tax bill would be called for passage last week but rumors were not verified.

Longer and more frequent sessions are now the order in an effort to get somewhere in the great mass of legislation which will have to be taken up if all of the bills which have been introduced receive consideration.

The School Commission is shaping up a report to be presented soon to the Assembly. Members interested in schools are hoping that the commission will have some recommendations for school financial support that will be accepted by the legislature. Time is rapidly passing and it will be difficult to accomplish much in the present session. There is talk that a special session will be necessary for school legislation. School consolidation will be one of the items of importance in the report of the commission as well as recommendations as to the size of the state distributive funds. Up to the present time House Bills No. 910 and No. 911 introduced by Lottie Holman O'Neill and which provide a distributive fund of $29,000,000 are the only bills introduced on that subject.

The Motor Driver's License Bill was called for second reading in the House. Representative Schnackenberg offered an amendment which removed the examination provisions of the bill. The amendment was defeated but the voting disclosed the great opposition to the Drivers' License Measure.

Committee hearings are becoming farcical in the great rush to put bills on the calendar. Nearly any bill can get through the committee to which it has been assigned because of the limited time for the hearings and the fact that every member has perhaps a half dozen committees, all meeting at the same time. A fairer test for a bill comes on the floor of the house.

Newly Crowned Speed
King To Run In AAA

Races Sunday

Kelly Petillo, newly crowned American speed king signed with Earl Newberry, to participate in the AAA Auto races at the new River road-North Avenue Speedway here, Sunday, June 9, marking Kelly's first appearance before the speed fans since riding to fame in the Indianapolis 500-mile grind atop a new all-time speed record averaging 106.240 miles per hour during the entire 250 miles.

Petillo is one Indianapolis champion who will continue to race, not only for gold but for glory. Winning the Mimes Field classic in December added to his laurels on the Pacific coast and now topping the fastest field of race cars ever to start a race, the diminutive Italian will seek new honors in the mid-western sectional AAA championship circuit.

Several other brilliant Indianapolis speedway drivers will be seen in action here June 9, among whom are Johnny Sawyer, Milwaukee flash; Jimmy Snyder who drove his first AAA race at Indianapolis this year; Emil Andres, popular Chicago pilot; Maynard Clark, only living winner of a feature event at the local speedway and Ted Horn, the ace member of the Ford V-8 team.

Time trials will start at 11 a. m. and the first race at 3 p. m. daylight time. Added to the rained out field of 35 cars entered for May 12 will be several of the greatest auto racers in America and efforts are being made to bring Al Gordon here for the Chicago inaugural speed classic. Gordon started in the first row at Indianapolis and miraculously escaped death when his car hurtled the concrete wall.

Petillo will bring his victory car with him for June 9, but may drive a smaller car in a match race with Maynard Clark, local track champion and use the larger car for exhibition purposes only or use it in the feature race, against the mid-west championship field.

Local speed fans are planning elaborate ceremonies to welcome the new Speed king to Chicago, who will be accompanied by his wife and eight year old son Kelly Jr. and Pete De Paola, former AAA champion and winner of the Indianapolis 5000 mile grind who is acting as Petillo's manager.

Fred Frame, another Indianapolis victor will be on hand for the opening speed events. The races are being staged under the AAA Contest Board sanction and are regular speedway type race cars, not midgits.

What Is Truth?

By W. J. Geffert, Lutheran Minister

Interesting testimony with regard to the truth of the Bible is found in the fulfillment of its many prophecies. Justin Martyr truly says:

"To declare a thing shall come to be, long before it is in being, and then to bring about the accomplishment of that very thing according to the same declaration, this, or nothing, is the work of God."

Bible readers will remember that Ham, son of Noah, on a certain occasion showed great disrespect for his father, Shem and Japhet however conducted themselves, with the proper respect at such a time. It was then that Noah cried out: "Cursed be Canaan (son of Ham); a servant of servants shall he be; blessed be the Lord God of Shem; Canaan shall be his servant; God shall enlarge Japhet, and Canaan shall be his servant. Gen. 9, 25, 27.

Was this prophecy fulfilled? It was. The leading descendants of Ham and Canaan are the Negroes. History shows that the Negro has been the slave of the world. This is still true today.

Shem is the father of the Hebrew nation, the Old Testament church, Christ and the New Testament church. Certainly the blessing of Shem we experience in the blessings of Christianity is the fulfillment of the words: "Blessed be the Lord God of Shem."

The Caucasian race sprang from Japhet. The white man has conquered the world, has enlarged his borders according to the prophecy: "God shall enlarge Japhet."

Another interesting fulfillment of a Biblical prophecy concerns the great city of Nineveh, built by Noah's great grandson, Nimrod. Nineveh rivalled most cities of the world for nearly 1500 years. About 700 B. C. the prophet Nahum foretold her downfall. Almost a 100 years later the city was destroyed by the Babylonians and Medes.

The prophet Isaiah foretold the destruction of the mighty Babylon, the "Glory of Kingdoms." The prophet Jeremiah also prophesied concerning Babylon's capture during a festival, while the princes were drunk. (Chapters 25, 50 & 51), 175

Tidy sums in "butter and egg money" are made by farm women who use the telephone. A telephone call is a quick, easy and dignified way to sell. One call to the local market determines the highest prices being paid. Another call to each customer clinches the sale, assures delivery and often results in additional orders for poultry and seasonal produce at the best prices available. This is only one of many things the farm telephone can do at a profit! Employed every day, for a variety of uses, it can and repeatedly does show a profit above its cost. Remember, it works for small pay.

S'too bad that's all. The boys got beat Sunday and how they got beat. From the looks of things that week of leisure with no practice had its bad effect. They couldn't seem to be at the right place at the right time, if they were they were shaky and couldn't hold the ball. The errors in this game were costly, every last one of them. Wes was the tosser but there was no support and finally Wes was unstrung himself and was relieved by Chuck Liess in the eighth. The boys were in hard luck all the way through. They had a hard time finding the diamond and what rolling hills, nice little meadows, with a little brook running (which strange to say had a magnet effect on the ball as they all were plenty wet) through it. The benches were padded and had nice backs to them, the only trouble was they hadn't arrived yet so we used the ole sod. Oh me what a day, what a game.

It's a grand thing to jump into for that unexpected jaunt, and is smartly at home in practically any daytime environment. Make it in a new printed linen or cotton, or a cravat silk. It's stunning, too, in plaided or striped sports seersucker or cotton.

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, "Penelope," in an effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. At a baseball game a ball strikes ten-year-old Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin splits the child to Europe. Gatlin wills Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for her when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, rising young psychiatrist, is presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" is in part responsible. McNamara does not think she is a criminal and obtains Burt's testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's office nurse, is also won over. Nance's criminal record outweighs Doctor Burt's explanation of her case and she is sent to San Quentin penitentiary. Nance escapes, although shot, and goes to Lanny's apartment, from which, by McNamara's orders, she is removed to the chief's home. From one of the men in the boat on which the girl escaped McNamara learns that Nance's real name is Penelope Gatlin. He also discovers that she is heirless to $750,000. Fearful of McNamara, in his official capacity, Nance flees. Lanny finds her in her apartment, asleep. Knowing detectives are on her trail, she disappears.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued

McNamara chuckled. Flynn and Angellotti would waste a great deal of time watching that apartment house in vain. Nance, discovering Ella Cates had moved, had sought quarters elsewhere. What puzzled McNamara, however, was the girl's failure to communicate with him or Lanny; and he knew now that she did not intend to. The fact that she had purchased a letter of credit was proof that she intended leaving the country, and the more the excellent fellow contemplated this impending move the more inclined was he to regard it as a not unmixed blessing.

The more he thought the matter over, the more inclined did he become to take a practical and policeman-like view of the situation. While Nance remained in San Francisco she would be a constant menace to himself and Lanny; if captured she might, during one of her uncontrolled moments, consider it a great joke to tell the world how she had been enabled to escape capture so long.

"I can't baby the world," he decided. "I'll let her go. She'll probably live abroad, and when her letter of credit is gone she may remember who she is long enough to draw more checks. I can always get a line on her through the bank, and if Steve and Lanny still insist on salvaging this nut I'll tell them where to find her. Me, I'm through. If I keep this pace up I'll be as big a nut as she is."

There is more than a modicum of truth in the ancient adage, "Out of sight, out of mind." Dan McNamara lived a very full life; and when Nance Belden had definitely passed beyond his ken and he knew himself safe at last from the prying of Messrs. Flynn and Angellotti into his private affairs, he forgot the girl, for pressing matters of great importance claimed his attention and he required more first-class assistance than he was receiving. He resolved, therefore, to give Flynn and Angellotti a week in which to make up their minds they had lost the trail; then to call them in.

On the sixth day, however, he received information that the doughty pair were still as busy as two pups with a feather duster. A beautiful lady called on him at his office and told him so.

"And who might you be?" he demanded.

"I'm Susan Engelbright."

"I am not aware that I have the pleasure of your acquaintance, Miss Engelbright."

"You haven't. I was sent up from Oakland."

"Oh! Alias Sapphire Susie! I've heard of you lately."

"Perhaps. I hocked three twelve-carat sapphire rings to raise money, and the papers called me Sapphire Susie after that."

"I see you got them out of hock again, Susie."

The girl nodded. "Nance Belden got them out for me."

"Part of the bargain for smuggling that letter out of San Quentin for her, I suppose."

"Never mind what it was for," Sapphire Susie smiled archly and unafraid. "I earned it and she kept her word."

"Check or cash?" McNamara was frightened. If Sapphire Susie had been given a check, then she knew Nance Belden's real name and the name of her bank. And that would be fatal.

"I don't know. I gave her the pawn tickets and she got back the rings. I don't know just how."

"When?" He was relieved.

"A week ago tomorrow."

"And you say Detective Sergeant Flynn has been giving you a bad half hour?"

"Yes, he has."

"Well, that's his business. Nance Belden escaped from San Quentin and naturally he's interested in apprehending her. You were recognized by the guard at the main gate two weeks before Nance escaped. Miss Lanning, a friend of the Belden girl, had visited the prisoner that day, and since Miss Lanning was the only visitor Nance Belden had in San Quentin, naturally she was suspected of carrying a letter for delivery to the men who helped Nance escape. You rode down to Greenbrae with Miss Lanning, and she slipped the letter to you, of course. Flynn knows that. But why come to me with your tale of woe?"

"I've run straight since getting out of the pen. I served my time and I want to be let alone—that's why! Flynn told me that if I didn't come through and tell him where he could find Nance Belden he'd see to it that something nasty happened to me. I don't know where Nance Belden is. And I want protection from Patrick Flynn."

"You seem pretty sure of me, don't you?"

"Well, Nance told me that you were one human being. And I called on Miss Lanning last night to tell her to warn Nance that the dicks were after her, and Miss Lanning told me to see you about it. She said you'd see I got a square deal."

"She did so, now? How did Miss Lanning treat you otherwise?"

"She kissed me and gave me a hundred dollars and told me to be as good as I could. The old girl is sure a darling."

"Did you ask her for the hundred?"

"Of course not."

The chief eyed her owlishly, for he distrusted Sapphire Susie and wondered if she might not be working in the interests of Flynn and Angellotti.

"This is interesting," he admitted heavily. "Of course I only keep in touch with the upper office through the captain of detectives. If he set Flynn on this job he should have interviewed you a couple of weeks ago. Seems to me he has overlooked a good bet. If he'd had you under surveillance a week ago he'd have picked up Nance Belden when she came to you to deliver the rings. Flynn's a crackerjack detective," he added sadly, "but this looks as if he's slipping."

"That bird don't slip very far, take it from me, Chief. He met me on the street the day before yesterday and noticed I was wearing my big ring and my earrings. 'Hello, kid,' he says, 'I see you got your sapphires on again.' I says to him, 'Fall dead, you bum.'"

"He's Got Me Scared to Death," Sapphire Susie Declared.

and walked on. And the next night he came up to my room. 'Nance Belden got them sapphires out of hock for you, Susie, my dear,' he says kindly. 'I want that trail. Where is she?'

"And you wouldn't tell him, even if you could?"

"That's a fact. I wouldn't snitch on her."

"You wouldn't expect me to interfere in the work of a detective sergeant when he appears to be doing a good job, would you, Susie? But I give you my word, Susie, that if you run straight in this city I'll see to it that you're not harassed. Of course you helped Nance Belden to escape from San Quentin, and I know it, but I can't prove it; if I could I'd put you in the birdcage this minute. And I'll not put Flynn off the case, although if he gets too rough I'll stop him."

"He's got me scared to death," Sapphire Susie declared, and commenced to weep a little; whereat McNamara realized she had been really frightened. She shook his hand warmly, thanked him and departed.

For several minutes McNamara sat thinking, a smile, faintly tender, illuminating his rugged countenance. So Lanny had kissed Sapphire Susie and given her a hundred dollars and begged her to be a good girl in the future. What a rare good sport Lanny was!

And how good God had been to all concerned! In their pursuit of Nance, Flynn and Angellotti had followed such a hot trail they had forgotten Sapphire Susie was a pal of Nance's, but afterwards, when the trail grew cold, they had suddenly remembered her.

That Flynn was a marvel, and McNamara sighed to think the fellow could not be promoted instantly. In all probability he had not at first connected Nance Belden with the glory of Susie's sapphires. Undoubtedly he had jumped to the conclusion that the girl had been up to her old trick of blackmailing some wealthy and socially prominent masculine jackass. So he had looked up her record in the police files. Here he had discovered something that must have convinced him of Susie's total innocence of sapphires during her trial; certainly she had not carried them to San Quentin with her, and the obvious conclusion was that she had pawned them to raise money to pay her attorney. In the hope of discovering the identity of Susie's latest victim (who, he assumed, had redeemed them for her) Flynn had thereupon made a round of the pawnshops and located the one from which the jewels had lately been redeemed; from the pawnbroker he had secured a description of the one who had redeemed them. No pawnbroker would be likely to forget Nance Belden's nose!

McNamara shrugged. If Nance should visit Sapphire Susie now, she would undoubtedly walk straight into the arms of the waiting Flynn or Angellotti.

Well, Nance Belden had stolen a dozen pairs of silk hose, but apparently Penelope Gatlin paid her debts. The chief wondered if he had loaned Nance Belden or Penelope Gatlin two hundred dollars, for of course they were two separate and distinct personalities inhabiting the same body. If Nance Belden had accepted the loan, then McNamara could kiss the money good-by. If, on the other hand, Penelope Gatlin had accepted it, then, some day, when Nance had changed places with Penelope, he would get it back. Well, he could trace her progress through the world by the drafts she would give. Her bank in San Jose would give him that information.

He took down the telephone and called the bank. Yes, a draft had just come in. Drawn for four hundred and thirty-five dollars in favor of the French line, dated three days previously at New York. It had come across the continent by air mail. McNamara thanked the president of the bank and called up the French line's San Francisco office. After some difficulty he discovered that four hundred and thirty-five dollars was payment of one first cabin passage to Havre and that the Ile de France had sailed from New York during the past three days.

Instantly Dan McNamara shot a straight telegram to police headquarters in New York, requesting that the passenger list of the Ile de France be checked to see whether Nance Belden or Penelope Gatlin had taken passage on her. Four hours later he received a reply to the effect that Nance Belden was not aboard but that Penelope Gatlin was.

"Nothing is lost if you know where it is," McNamara decided happily, and sent a cable to the prefect of police at Havre, requesting him to pick up Penelope Gatlin on her arrival at that port, shadow her and report by cable, collect, the girl's destination, the names and addresses of those who should meet her and any other information that would aid in keeping track of the girl.

The following day McNamara sent for Detective-Sergeants Flynn and Angellotti. As they ranged themselves, more or less at attention, in front of his desk, the chief leaned back in his chair and bent upon the pair a long, severe and penetrating look. They grew a little fidgety before he spoke.

"Well, boys, how are your private affairs prospering?"

Both shrugged, unwilling to be definite.

"They are unprosperous," the chief challenged, "so I have called you in to express the hope that you are now quite willing to abandon your private practice and return to work for the city and county of San Francisco. You draw salary from the taxpayers, you know. I may have been mistaken, Angellotti, but I thought I saw you out in Mission recently when you were supposed to be working on that racketeer killing over in North Beach. However, I'll overlook that on the assumption that you permitted yourself to be led astray by Flynn. Flynn, you lay off Sapphire Susie until that enterprising young woman does something you can pin on her. Then bring her in."

"She's done something and I'll pin it on her yet," Flynn growled, "and you know what it is." Flynn, being Irish, was unwilling that his chief should regard him as deficient in intelligence and enterprise.

"We understand each other thoroughly, Flynn. You've been after that Belden girl and you've made a mess of it." He opened his desk drawer and drew out two envelopes. One was addressed to Flynn and the other to Angellotti and both envelopes bore the return address of a prominent New York hotel, but were neither stamped nor postmarked. "These two envelopes came in a large envelope addressed to me," McNamara explained. "They're sealed!" He handed each detective his letter and watched as they opened them and drew forth typewritten letters and two hundred and fifty dollars in bills. Flynn's letter was, undoubtedly, a carbon copy of Angellotti's.

Flynn perused his letter and handed it to the chief, who read:

"Dear Mr. Flynn:

"You poor dear, you have worked so hard and so intelligently and in such dreadfully hard luck that my heart goes out to you. You were working for the reward, of course—no doubt because you needed the money. You and Mr. Angellotti would have had to divide two hundred and fifty dollars had you recaptured me, but just to prove I'm a sport and not holding any mean little grudge, I'm sending you each two hundred and fifty dollars. Please be good and try to forget all the unpleasant incidents. You will never get me now, so do give up your attempts, like good boys."

The letter was unsigned.

"How much did you get, Angellotti?" McNamara queried softly.

"Two fifty, Chief."

TO BE CONTINUED.

HERE'S AMERICAN OF THE FUTURE

As Depicted by Prominent Anthropologist.

Those of us who might be interested in science's quest to determine the exact nature of the typical American so far as his physical makeup is concerned, probably will find some small comfort in the theory of Professor Albert E. Jenks, a noted anthropologist of the University of Minnesota. The gist of Professor Jenks' opinion is that whatever the number of conflicting conceptions might exist at the moment as to the physical identity of the American, the time is not too far distant when he will have a definite and recognizable racial classification.

The typical American, according to Professor Jenks, will not be a tall blond person, as some might have supposed. He will be only "fairly tall," dark eyed, dark-haired and darker skinned than the present average. This, he asserts, will be the ultimate outcome of the interbreeding among the early and late arrivals on this continent. Upon the whole, if Professor Jenks' theory is well founded, the typical American will not be an unattractive person, assuming, of course, that he incorporates a portion of the better physical qualities of each of the racial strain, that make him.

Man's concern over the question of what he is, as well as what he does, is not motivated solely by considerations of vanity. Curiosity also plays its part. In seeking the Helene of the classicist and the Roman of the Etruscan line he finds them not in the Greek and Italian of today. He becomes giddy, striving to follow the ancient medley of races that swarmed and intermingled on the Spanish peninsula. In striving to trace his family lineage he is dismayed by the multitude of his own ancestors, enough to populate a small city within a surprisingly few generations.

In any event, and whatever we of America might eventually become, there is comfort in the thought that we shall be a definite something. Since we are a nation, there is little reason why we should not also be a race; and it must be acknowledged that there is some excellent material here.—Manchester (N. H.) Union.

KIDNAP VICTIM SAFE:

MANHUNT BEGINS

June 1st dawned cold and wet.
A game little boy trudged six miles to the farmhouse of John Bonifas, chicken rancher. When Bonifas opened the door the youngster piped,
"I'm the little boy who was kidnapped." When it heard the news America breathed a sigh of relief.
Federal men unleashed the full force of their complicated machinery for hunting down the kidnappers of 9 year old George Weyerhaeuser;
$200,000 was the price of the youngster's freedom. Since May 27th John Phillip Weyerhaeuser, one of the heirs to a $1,000,000,000 lumber fortune and his family had made frantic appeals to the kidnappers in the pages of the Seattle
Post-Intelligencer: "Due publicity beyond our control, please indicate another method of reaching you.
Hurry, relieve anguished mother."
May 29th was the deadline for the ransom payment. On the 30th an unknown man entered the Weyerhaeuser home with three mysterious cardboard boxes, a foot square, two inches deep. Still a family spokesman lamented "We haven't heard a thing." On May 31st seven days had passed since little George vanished, thus permitting Federal prosecution of the criminals under
